

THE Latchmere House PARTNERSHIP

Press Announcement - Immediate Release

An exciting step for DAC Architects

The Latchmere House Partnership, based in Canterbury has acquired DAC Architects. This marks an important milestone in the continued growth and development of the partnership.

Established in 1967, DAC Architects is a respected and well-known practice in Gravesend. Throughout that time, they have built an excellent reputation for delivering high-quality architectural services and developing long-standing relationships with clients.

Latchmere House, which includes well known architects practices, James Clague and Taylor Roberts, is very pleased to welcome DAC's two directors, Jonathan Rowland and Leslie May to their team.

This acquisition also sees the opening of a new office for both DAC and Latchmere House, the Thames Gateway office based in Dartford, and the DAC team will relocate to this office, a short distance from their original Gravesend offices. This enhanced geographic coverage will support continued growth and provide greater opportunities to serve clients across the area.

DAC clients will continue to work with the existing team but also now have wider resources available via Latchmere House, including structural engineering, measured building surveys and interior design all within the same group.

About Latchmere House

With a head office in the heart of the city of Canterbury, Latchmere House brings six specialist engineering and architecture practices under one roof. The collective includes James Clague Architects, Taylor Roberts Architects, Elizabeth Nixon Interior Architecture and Design, BSF Engineering, Discovered By, and ProPoint Surveys.

The partnership also has offices in Tunbridge Wells, Winchester and serves Kent, Sussex and Hampshire with a specialisms including listed and heritage buildings as well as high-quality small developments.

James Clague - Managing Director comments:

This is an exciting milestone for the Latchmere House Partnership, the acquisition of DAC Architects opens up new areas as well as bringing highly skilled architects onboard. The Thames Gateway office will bridge city and country settings with great potential for exciting projects.

Jonathan & Leslie of DAC Architects have released the following statement:

We are delighted and excited for the future to be joining forces with the Latchmere House Partnership; which will enable DAC Architects to access an array of additional resources and allow the continued growth of the practice across North-West Kent and further across the South-East and London.
